

Kate Bedford, Research Fellow at the University of Kent Law School, spoke February 12, 2009, on "Embedding Neoliberalism: Crisis, Sexuality and Social Reproduction." Her talk was the first of the 2009 Women in Development Series, sponsored in part by the Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

Students listen to Kate Bedford speak at a Women in Development lecture.

Kate Bedford spoke on February 12 about interactions between sexuality studies, international development, and gender policy. She focused primarily on her work in Argentina with programs sponsored by the World Bank.

Kate Bedford (left) pictured with Cathy Rakowski, Women in Development series organizer and Associate Professor of Women's Studies and Rural Sociology.